"The World Needs" by Emma Briggeman

If the world had a superhero for you and me

It would not be a warrior always out to fight

Always causing battles, often causing plight

Sometimes the world needs a little love

An act of kindness, even one simple hug

To show that the world does not have to be bad

There does not have to have horror

It does not have to be sad

If I became the superhero of this place

I would wrap everyone in a warm embrace

To remind them what love really is

And to show that everyone on this earth needs a second chance

One more shot at life

We all make mistakes, and I would not change that

But when I spread my cape to take flight

Everyone would feel my love and warmth

In the deep dead dark of night

And when the wind starts to howl

And the clouds and rain come in

I would make a rainbow shining through the storm

The world would be a better place

When people started showing grace

My superpower would be kindness

And I would brighten all the blindness

If the world had a superhero for you and me

It would not be a warrior always out to fight

Always causing battles, often causing plight

Because the world needs light, the world needs love

The world needs a superhero to do all of the above

And I would do just that
