"Would you do it for the world" by Taylor Hannan

If you could choose a power, would you, do it for the world

Would you choose to grow a flower wherever you might stand

Would you choose to grow trees in a far-off land

Would you choose to grow grass where brush lingers most

Would you choose to grow truth where people like to boast

Would you choose to grow food so the hungry can feast

Would you choose to make a sword so you can fight an evil beast

If you could choose a power, would you, do it for the world

Will you give all you have to make a tinny little flower

Will you give all your effort for one single tree

Will you give all your time to create a land of grass

Will you give your kindest heart to make truth over all

Will you give all your strength so the starving can feast

Will you try your best to create a sword to fight the strongest beast

Will you give all your power to give it to the world

When you chose the power and gave it to the world

Your many tiny flowers grew to be great happiness

Your many big trees grew to be bigger peace

Your many planes of grass grew to be a humble home

Your many friends grew to never tell a lie

Your many crops made no one ever hungry

Your many battles made a lot of tales and monsters no longer Rome the earth

When you chose your power, you gave it to the world
